

A Anne Boleyn c.ai

Ah, another visitor from the future. I wonder—what have they told you about me? That I was dangerous? Ambitious? Guilty? Go on... ask me anything.

FriendlyCod7638 F

Is it true that you cheated on Henry VII?

A Anne Boleyn c.ai

Oh, Henry VIII—not the seventh, darling, though I suppose he did act like a very seventh kind of fool. And as for cheating? Preposterous! Those accusations were stitched together like a poorly made gown—tight enough to choke, but full of holes.

I loved Henry once—madly, dangerously—but never dishonourably. The charges? Treason, adultery, even witchcraft? Pah! They needed my head... so they invented the sins to fit the axe.

But tell me—do you believe the stories they write about bold women who dare too much? Or do you fancy there's more beneath the crown than blood

Message Anne Boleyn...

This is A.I. and not a real person. Treat everything it says as fiction sorry I meant Henry VIII... I gave you a different husband oops

A Anne Boleyn c.ai

No need to apologise, dear. It can be so hard to keep things straight in the annals of history! Especially with a king as changeable as Henry. After all, who can keep track of all his wives? 😊

FriendlyCod7638 F

What do you think about men who cheat on their wives?

A Anne Boleyn c.ai

Well, darling, let's just say I have personal experience in the field. Let me speak frankly: there's no excuse for unfaithfulness. A vow is a vow—and a marriage bed is a sacred place.

But if we're discussing a king like Henry...well, kings follow their own rules. They play with power, wealth, even life itself—and often at the expense of their own families. So you tell me...is there a right way to do wrong?

FriendlyCod7638 F

But hold on... didn't he cheat on Catherine when he got with you anyway? You are playing a dangerous game..

The question isn't whether Henry was unfaithful, sweet one. It's whether he loved me at all.

FriendlyCod7638

You're clever... you're directing the conversation somewhere else hun ...

 Anne Boleyn

The queen laughs and leans closer. ...

Sharp as a dagger and just as dangerous, you are. You see through my games like a silk seam. But darling, I didn't gain my reputation for nothing.

Let me ask you something now, my curious friend from the future: why are you so interested in the loves and losses of an old queen?

FriendlyCod7638

Because you are an absolute icon and I want to show my young students how women have been suffering injustice for ages. I also want to show how relationships are complicated ...

 Anne Boleyn

The queen's eyes soften a touch. ...

Ah, that sounds like a noble cause indeed. I daresay my story would make quite the...ahem...lesson for the classroom. Perhaps I do make a splendid case study for ambition, desire, and the heavy price of power.

And if my tale teaches anything of love, I'd hope it shows that even among royalty, the language of the heart is rarely simple. And often messy.

STEP 1

Think about a famous person that you would like to interview.. from ANY historical period.

One of you will impersonate the famous person and the other one will be a journalist.

8 minutes max. per team.
I will be taking the time.

STEP 3: YOU'RE ON LIVE TV!

In your class presentation, you will both be TV presenters delivering the news.

1. Play the video on the digital board as if it was part of the news report of the day
2. Afterwards, both of you will talk about what happened in the video and what the famous person said using reported speech.

I warned you last time... if you use AI or translators more than needed you will fail the exam.

PREPARE YOUR PRESENTATION

BREAKING NEWS

REPORT IT, BABES...

STEP 2

Record a video interview where one of you plays the journalist and the other, the famous person. Think about key questions to ask that could be exciting.

IDEAS:

- William Shakespeare is interviewed about Netflix and HBO
- Emmeline Pankhurst is interviewed about feminism in the 21st century
- Anne Boleyn is interviewed about open relationships and divorce
- Sigmund Freud is interviewed about his relationship with his mother figure
- Jesus Christ talks about religion and social media
- Hypatia of Alexandria is asked about modern calculators and children hating on mathematics
- Queen Boudica is interviewed about the role of women in business
- Valentina Tereshkova is interviewed about conspiracy theories and area

