Katie Frye, private eye

Last year, Katie Frye, 19, was still at school. Now she spends her time catching fraudsters, burglars and thieves!

Had you dreamed of becoming a detective before you got this job?

Yes, I had. I had always loved Sherlock Holmes stories. But I decided to become a lawyer because I hadn't realized that teenagers could be detectives! I had finished my first term at university when I read a really interesting article in a magazine. It was about young private investigators and it described my ideal job. A month later, I stopped studying and started work.

Tell us about a typical case.

Well, we recently investigated a woman who worked for a clothes company. Her employer thought she had stolen some jeans. We watched her leave work with a backpack and, after following her home, I knocked on her door. I said a friend had told me that she was selling cheap designer jeans. She opened the backpack that she'd brought home from work and showed me six pairs. I captured everything on video because I'd put a secret camera in my handbag. Being a teenager is incredibly useful because no one suspects me!

But isn't it dangerous?

Not really. The agency takes our safety very seriously. A senior detective always accompanies us when we're investigating a case. Sometimes it's upsetting, especially when cases relate to family problems, but in general it's fascinating. I suppose I'm just a curious person!

- 2 Read the text again and answer the questions.

- 1 What was Katie's original career plan?
- 2 Why did she leave university?
- 3 Why did she investigate a clothing company employee?
- 4 How could she show other people that the woman was guilty?
- 5 According to Katie, why is being young an advantage for an investigator?
- 6 How does the agency protect its young investigators?

- 3 Read the Learn it! box and complete the sentences in your notebook.

Learn it! Common error

Thief (plural thieves) is the general word for a person who steals things. A burglar steals from your house.
